Ralphs Grocery Store Chain: A Legacy of Supermarket Innovation Ralphs Brothers Grocery and New York Bakery, southwest corner of Sixth Street and Spring Street, 1886 Ralphs Grocery Company operates under the "Fresh for Everyone" brand, similar to other Kroger stores. In Southern California, Ralphs is currently the market share leader. The company had a significant event in 2003-04 when it locked out its workers in sympathy with Vons, another supermarket chain. The issues in contract negotiations included healthcare benefits and wage structure. The strike ended with a settlement that benefited the grocery chains, allowing new hires to be on lower pay scales than existing employees. In 2006, Ralphs agreed to pay $70 million to settle charges of illegally rehiring locked-out employees using false names and Social Security numbers. The company has contracts with the United Food and Commercial Workers union. Ralph Fiennes is a talented actor known for his diverse film roles and directorial endeavors. Notably, he appeared in the animated The Prince of Egypt (1998), alongside notable performances in films such as Sunshine (1999) and Oscar (1997). His range extends to notable directors like Neil Jordan, Kathryn Bigelow, and Wes Anderson. He has been part of major franchises including Harry Potter and James Bond series. Fiennes is also known for his roles in major film franchises such as the Harry Potter film series (2005-2011), in which he played the evil Lord Voldemort. His nephew, Hero Fiennes Tiffin, portrayed Tom Riddle, the young Lord Voldemort, in Harijs Poters un Jauktasinu Princis (2009). Ralph also appears in the James Bond series, playing M, starting with Operācija 'Skyfall' (2012). Fiennes made his directorial debut with Koriolāns (2011), a film adaptation of Shakespeare's tragedy. He won a Tony Award for playing Prince Hamlet on Broadway. In 2015, he played a music producer in Luca Guadagnino's Saules apzilbinātie (2015). Fiennes also starred in Joel and Ethan Coen's Sveicināts, cēzar! (2016). Since 1999, Fiennes has served as an ambassador for UNICEF UK.
